HOW THE GERMANS FOSTER TRADE.

A prominent feature connected with the higher interests of German industry in its relation to applied science is the 'Central Stelle,' established in connection with the manufacture of explosives. Several years ago, the rival makes of explosives combined together, and subscribed about £100,000 to found an establishment to be devoted to the investigation of the scientific problems on which the successful manufacture of higher explosives is dependent. The work is under the direction of one of the most distinguished professors of chemistry of the University of Berlin, who has under him a staff of highly-trained assistants. The establishment is maintained at a subscription of about £12,000 a year: and it is referred to, as they arise, problems by which subscribers in their individual work are confronted, whilst there is carried on a regular system of research, the results of which are communicated to the subscribers. We have heard, says Engineering, of the institutions in Germany of this nature before; but we must confess that we did not know they were carried to this extent. That a not very large, although rapidly increasing and doubtless lucrative, trade like that of the making of explosives should be able to collect for the purpose of research such a handsome sum as £100,000 and then add the equally important subscription of £12,000 a year, speaks volumes for the liberal-minded enterprise of German manufacturers. It is the more surprising because the making of explosives has always been one of the most secret arts, and it might well have been expected that mutual jealousies would have prevented the successful formation of the Central Stelle. The German Central Stelle would not be possible were not the system of technical education in that country sufficiently well organised to give a staff of competent investigators and assistants.

A GOOD COUGH MEDICINE.

[From the Gazette, Townsville, Australia.]

I find Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is an excellent medicine. I have been suffering from a severe cough for the last two months, and it is this which I have great pleasure in recommending it.—W. C.

WICKHAM. This is the opinion of one of our oldest and most respected residents, and has been voluntarily given in good faith that others may try the remedy and be benefited, as was Mr. Wickham. This remedy is sold by all Dealers; WATKINS
